An Empress Who Smokes. Empress Elizabeth of Austria smokes from thirty to forty Turkish and Russian eigarettes a day, and for many years it has been her invoterate custom to puff away after dinner at a strong Italian cigar, one salver. She says herself that smoking soothes her nerves, and that whenever she feels "bine" a right or cigarette will do more than anything else to cause her to see things in a happier light. She is a perfect Greek and Latin scholar, and when writing she smokes almost continually. On her writing table are always a large silver box of repousse work filled with eighrettes. a match box of carred Chinese jade and a capacions ash receiver, made of the boof of a favorite hunter, which broke its spine

A New Profession.

At first it seems like a humble one-to mend-but every work that is well done is honorable. Elizabeth, Florence and I are all busy women. All the day through the click of the typewriter, the "swish" of a full pen or the two and two and five being added up are about us. When evening comes the eyes are too tired, the fingers too weary and too unaconstanted to holding the needle to put a darn here, mend a shirt there or put the loose buttons in place on a coat. Now why cannot some girl who has made-well, not quite a success at dressmaking-be known to us, a girl to whom the size of the trunk or the wardrobe is given with a request that she will "straighten things!" I do not know whether false pride keeps them from this work, but it is much better to be a good mender than to be a poor dressmaker, and once you get your circle of customers be sure you will be kept busy. Florence's black skirt all freshened up and mended will sing your praises. Elizabeth's stockings daintils mended will tell of your deft fingers, and the buttons sewed firmly in position on my coat will, martial like, stand out and give a military salute to your ability. That's one profession for women who sew well in which a good living could be made.-Ruth Ashmore in Ladies' Home Journal.

NOT SURE OF ANTTHING Adversity Had Taught Him Not to Be Too Certain.

"Um-I'm not so sure about that," said the other cautiously. "The wind, at least, is dead south now."

"Um-perhaps."
"It certainly isn't north." The lean individual pursed up his lips as if about to whistle, looked at the sky again, shook his head slowly and said: "I'm not so blamed certain it isn't."

"At any rate, sir, it isn't raining now, is it? Hey?" Another careful examination of the firmament and the cautious remark: "It may be raining and it may not. You can't always tell about these things."

New beauties with each rising sun. A large share of the fashionable trade in southern Kansas comes to us for millinery. The kind of talent we employ here cannot be found elsewhere. No other house in southern Kansas will pay for it, being but one department in a large business its share of expense is small. It is well known that Munson & McNamara offer numerous advantages to tastful and prudent buyers.

The Chic or a French Bounet. I could always sympathize with the woman who sold her shees that she might buy a French bounet, for if you have ever had any doubt on the subject before you know now that milliners are born and not made, and that they can only come from this country of sunshine. An English or an American bonnet is one seems to have been thought out of milliner has some sort of outlook into the future, knew you were coming, and knew just what you would want. Demost in vogue. A typical one is of pale yellow creps, without a crown, and just emeralds. I never knew butterflies had placed. The ties are of black velvet,
